ometime in my last year of sixth form, someone I knew handed me a flyer.

The flyer said 'poetry and rap workshop, @BYC, Weds 5-7,' (or something like that.) I was amazed. Although I'd been secretly writing poetry for years, and vaguely knew of the existence of poetry open mics, [I had no idea that poetry was something you could 'workshop' or share with other people in that way.] 'Workshops leading to performance at B.Fest in May, possible trip to Edinburgh Fringe in August,' the flyer said. I went to the workshop with a friend. I had no idea that the opportunity provided by B.Fest, or the workshop I went to on a whim, would eventually lead to me pursuing a career in poetry, and performing nationally and internationally.

The confidence that I have gained through performing poetry has helped me in all areas of my life, as well as the experience gained from organising and hosting events, travelling and putting on shows independently, and working and thriving in a supportive community of young artists.

I read today that the arts economy contributes more than agriculture in the UK- but increasingly, the creative young people that make art and shape culture are not being recognised or supported. That is why it is so important that B.Fest exists as a festival that champions open access and creative expression for all. I hope that many more young people for many more years to come can make the most of the opportunities that I feel so lucky to have had, and that are still being provided by B.Fest.

ART IN MIND

Art in Mind creates art to raise awareness around mental health. We run regular supportive art groups at Brighton Youth Centre. If you are interested in our drop-in art workshop on Wednesdays 4-6, then please come along.

INNER DEMONS AND BETTER ANGELS

Masks we wear everyday; from the ordinary to the extraordinary. Young people have created masks exploring different aspects of their sense of self, mental health and well-being.
@Cultureground Art in Mind

CREATURES IN MY HEAD

Young people have used clay and mod roc to represent unwanted, involuntary and intrusive thoughts, as well as exploring issues around body image.

SUPER HEROES & SUPER VILLAINS

Young people from Art in Mind
have reinterpreted a series of Super Heroes and Super Villains who also experience
mental health issues.
@Cultureground Art in Mind

UK UNSIGNED

Selection of visual art, photography and illustration from students at UK unsigned Brighton.

LOVE (TO) BITS

Love (To) Bits is a seriously comedic drama or kind of a dramatic comedy, however you choose to look at it, there will be laughter...
and some tears, performed in the style of a stand-up comedy gig that incorporates verbatim theatre elements. The play is comprised of two story arcs. The main arc focuses on the romantic life of the main character, Cynthia, while the secondary one showcases different people's answer to the age old question "What is love?" The two are perpetually intertwined.
